Inventors, artists, poets, educators, and scientists are gifted with vigorous imaginations. 2. Imagination is the intentional picturing power. All its products are individual and have a material basis. We call our capability to purposely make images, imagination. The successful student uses his imagination almost as much as he uses his reason. 3. Imagination is the creative power of the soul. In its highest form, it virtually creates. Its creations are new because experiences are set in new lights. Poetry is truer than history. A fable may contain more truth than a biography, because the permanent meaning of things is set in general forms. Because they represent universal human nature, the creations of Homer and Plato and Shakespeare and Emerson will continue to live through the centuries. Limits of Imagination. --Lofty as are his nights, self, as imagination, works within well-defined...
