George S Boughton. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 358 pages. Dimensions: 8.0in. x 5.2in. x 0.8in. This truly scientific action adventure is - space travel to space cities; the environment, climate change, earthquakes and oil pollution; as well as the reality of dinosaur extinctions Synopsis: You are living in the 2060s. Change is inescapable. The people around you are nothing like those you know today. The world population has increased from seven to nine billion and everyone has a highly developed lifestyle, whereas 50 years earlier only one billion could enjoy such a level. In the science novel DeepStorm OutTack, devastating consequences are averted through UNESCO's tough stance on conservation, notably deforestation and oil pollution, and urbanites must now accept beehive dwellings and birth licensing. Nature is not the same either. The ageing Earth pushes up barometric pressures and the expanding Sun forces up temperatures. Now, quickening continental movements shake and sweep cities to ruin. A new age is beginning. . . Under world governments initiatives, populations now migrate to man-made Near Earth Territories, amid outbreaks of war. Civilisation is taking its place in the cosmos. This tale is told by young cosmologists and earth scientists enlisted from ordinary Earth backgrounds to become the pioneers of a new way of life. As scientific researchers, they also have a deeper mission. . . using extraordinary techniques, they must explore the lives of dinosaurs to understand Gaia's devastating transformation - and they make actual scientific discoveries, published exclusively and for the first time within these pages. Reviews: A keen scientific theorist, the author chose to use the novel form to carry his scientific concepts and unfurl his vision of coming decades and the direction he believes were heading. SPA UK magazine. The concepts are well described helped by the authors knowledge and background....
